Injurious Insects.

There are few things more humiliating to humanity than the sense of man's helplessness before very small insects. Tigers or wolves we can exterminate easily enough, if we really set ourselves to work at it; rats, mice and weasels we can keep down somehow. But before the Colorado beetle or the seventeen-year locust we are practically almost resourceless. And before the phylloxera or the hop-fly we can hardly do more than look on regretfully with folded hands. Yet it is some consolation to reflect that what seems at first sight a useless and purely ornamental science can help us to some extent in dealing with these infinitesimal pests. The only way to conquer them, if way there be at all, is to learn their whole life-history; to know them in the egg, in the larva, in the pupa, in the full-fledged insect; to crush them in every stage with whatever weapon the subtleties of chemistry or mere ingenious brute force can suggest; and to do nothing which can in any way give them a single extra chance of life. Nothing, in fact, could better show the intimate interaction and reaction of knowledge and practice than this interesting study. On the one hand, no means can be devised for getting rid of injurious insects except by a thorough scientific acquaintance with their origin and metamorphoses; on the other hand, no such careful observations on particular life-histories have ever been undertaken, probably, except with the stimulus of some practical advantage to mankind in view. Thus science and agriculture both gain by the conjunction. Even butterfly-hunting has its special commercial uses, when the butterfly turns out to be the parent of the gooseberry caterpillar, or to lay the eggs from which a warm sun will hatch out the destructive cabbage-worm.

Many of these observations help to bring out the minute interaction which often obtains between different parts of the organic balance; so that if we want to exterminate a particular insect, we must sometimes begin by encouraging or repressing some seemingly unconnected bird or plant. For example, botanists have long known that wet seasons are particularly favorable to charlock, and that after two or three such seasons the fields, unless diligently weeded, are yellow all over with its bright blossom. But charlock is apparently the native food-plant of turnip fly, from which the insect spreads easily to the cultivated turnip—a closely allied artificial form; much as the Colorado beetle, originally parasitic on a solanum in the Rocky Mountains, took readily to the richer food of the very similar potato vines, as soon as extended tillage began to approach its natural habitat.

It is only by such careful observation, with practical application of the results, that we can hope to outwit our insect foes; for the more widely any particular crop is grown, the more generally can its natural enemies spread and survive. Even in England, where hill and dale, copse and hedge break up the tith, and where small fields of various staples are habitually much intermixed, the insects can easily migrate from patch to patch of their special food-plant: while in America, where the same crop sometimes covers hundreds of square miles together on the unfenced and unbroken plain, locusts and army worms can march straight across country, day after day, in regular battalions.—St. James' Gazette.

Farmers' Vacations.

Vacations have become fashionable, and perhaps it is well that they have. We Americans are a restless set of beings, always planning to do a little more than we are able to do, driving and rushing along, till all at once we find ourselves used up. These annual vacations have a tendency to offset the evils resulting from too constant application to business. But those who buy and sell wheat, corn, wool, butter or fruits, need the vacation no more than do those who produce these indispensable articles of food and clothing. The farmer may find the winter the best season for taking a long vacation, but he should certainly plan to ease off a little from the severe labors of the field, after the hay and grain harvest. Attending a picnic, going a-fishing, or riding off a dozen miles may be somewhat tiresome, especially when the roads are dusty, but it brings a change to the mind. A different set of muscles are brought into use, and new trains of thought are started which greatly relieve the monotony of the every day round of toil. The mind as well as the body gets weary and needs rest, or change, which in itself is rest. Did every man and every woman do their part towards maintaining themselves and contributing to the necessary burdens of society, it would not require ten hours nor even eight hours per day to supply one's needs, and there might be less demand for the annual vacation.

So too if men were not ambitious to accumulate far beyond their probable needs, there would be less necessity for periodical recuperation. Perhaps farmers are not open to criticism in this direction more than are men of many other occupations and callings. There are farmers, it is true, whose aim seems to be to get possession of more land so as to "raise more corn to feed to more hogs, to get more money with which to buy more land, for raising more corn, to feed to more hogs"—whose very lives are a never ending round of toil and trouble, but farmers are not alone in this. It is the result of an ambition to do something more than is done by the average worker. It comes too, partly from the habit of doing, for say what we will of the curse of labor, there is a real pleasure comes by work, that can be experienced in no other way. The difficulty seems to be to know just how much to do, or when to stop.

There is one difficulty the farmer labors under which few men in other occupations experience, at least so it seems to us. The merchant's work is done at his store, the mechanic's at his shop, and the hard thinking and hard study of the professional man, in his office, and when the labors of the day are over and they repair to their several homes, the cares and perplexities connected with their business, their work, are left behind. Life work and home life are kept distinct. But it is very different, as a rule, on the farm. The farmer's home is his workshop, and too often the home is buried in the shop. To the wife and little ones it is shop or factory nearly all the time, and for this reason the farmer and the farmer's family, above all others, need the annual vacation.—New England Farmer.

The Secretary of the Treasury has accepted a site for the proposed public building at Frankfort. It is what is known as the Saffel property and cost $17,400.

ANOTHER forged proxy has been discovered to have been used at the Saratoga convention, by which a Half-Breed vote was cast all day for the Stalwarts. By means of the two forged proxies, it is said that the Stalwarts secured the temporary organization and the nomination Folger.

It is reported that Folger is likely to be succeeded by Ex-Senator Thomas C. Platt, as Secretary of the Treasury, and that New York politicians are urging Folger's immediate resignation to insure success. In the meantime Folger considers a bird in hand worth two in the bush and holds on.

The Oxford (Pa.) press has the following to say with reference to a device used by a Mr. Hodgson for hoisting tobacco to drying places in his barn: It consists of a long piece of scantling over the end of which a rope runs in a pulley. This is placed upright in the desired place and the loaded tobacco lath are put on a little rigging attached to the rope and is easily and speedily drawn to the top, where it is held until taken off by the person aloft engaged in hanging it. The construction can be moved about where needed and has proved a very convenient help in this work. It is not patented, and other tobacco growers may profit by Mr. Hodgson's ingenuity.

The Washington Monument.

From the Louisville Post.

The Washington monument has reached a height of 292 feet. The work proceeds very quietly and scientifically. At the rate of present progress one foot a day will be added to the shaft for the next two months. When cold weather sets in the work will have to stop. The men at work on the top of the monument look like a cluster of bees. When finished it will be the tallest artificial elevation in the world, namely 500 feet. This will be eight feet above the highest of the Egyptian pyramids. The sight from the summit now is superb. The beautiful capital city lies before one as on a painted map, while the Potomac and all the grand scenery on both sides of it may be seen for a great distance. Working on the summit of the monument is a very hazardous employment. Its dangers are greatly lessened by a strong rope netting entirely surrounding the monument and constantly kept at a height six feet below the workmen. The wind is sometimes so strong up there that men are bodily lifted from their feet and blown off. One young man was blown off the other day and safely landed in the net without a scratch. The net has only been used of late. When the monument had reached 165 feet a cat wandered up to the top of it one night. The poor thing was blown off, but came down safely on all fours only to be worried to death by a watch-dog kept at the base of the monument, whose vigilance the cat had got the better of in going up.

THE Paris Kentuckian in speaking of the visit of General Grant to Bourbon county, some years ago, says:

In this connection we will state that John L. Grant, of Maysville, sixty-two years old, weight 266 pounds, six feet one inch high, is second cousin to General Grant. Squire Grant says the first money he ever earned was when he was 14 years old, he receiving two Spanish mill dollars for cradling one day. He has broken 389 pounds of hemp in one day. He is now a magistrate, and unlike his illustrious cousin, is a Democrat.

Kennedy, of the Presbyterian Church, officiating. The ceremony was witnessed by a large number of friends of the contracting parties. Mr. and Mrs. Cochran left the same afternoon for the East with the expectation of being absent about a month.

Steamboat Regatta at Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 27, 1882.—The River Regatta was a complete success in every particular and was witnessed by fully 25,000 people. There were sixteen boats in line and moved in review of the Lilly in the following order: City of Madison, James Taylor, Granite State, Champion No. 10, Kate Waters No. 2, Abe McDonald, Champion No. 8, Paris C. Brown, Golden Rule, Louis A. Sherley, Alex. Montgomery, E. A. Woodruff, Little Samson, Ariadne.

The start was made shortly before 11 o'clock, and the procession moved up stream in the order given above. The Lilly glided alongside the boats at will, and when the turning point was reached, five miles up the river, the City of Madison turned and when headed down stream she at once reduced her speed, barely maintaining steerage way.

The James Taylor then passed slightly beyond the point where the Madison turned and at once reduced her speed and regained her interval. The other boats followed in succession, and when the last had turned the column proceeded down stream without incident, passing Cincinnati early in the afternoon and moving five miles below the city.

The entire trip, twenty miles, was made in about four hours, and was exceedingly enjoyed by the passengers. The Lilly, on the trip, was the scene of much jovialty, and the distinguished persons aboard all shared in the enjoyment. To Capt. Wise and his staff is due the decided success of the undertaking, for never was a project more successfully carried out than the one on the river to-day. At least 10,000 people were on the Cincinnati side, and as many more on the banks at Covington and Newport.

The first vibration was the most violent shock and lasted about fifteen seconds.

PERSONALS.

Points About People Here and Elsewhere.

Mr. Arthur Powers called to see the BULLETIN yesterday.

Miss Mary Hackett, of Brooksville, is the guest of Miss Mary Hanley, of Front street.

Col. J. S. Hurt, the Democratic nominee for congress in this district is in Maysville to-day.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Cochran, Jr., left by the afternoon train, yesterday afternoon, on an extended trip to the East.

The Montezuma, (Ind.) Era says: Mr. S. K. Spencer, of Mattoon, Ill., and Miss Ella Spencer, of Minerva, Ky., are visiting Mrs. Ann Jones.

Miss Gussie Billings, of Cincinnati, who has been spending several days in Maysville, will return home to-morrow. A certain Government store-keeper has taken a sudden fancy to be transferred to the Cincinnati district.

THE new American comedy "Judge Slasher," which is pronounced by the press to be one of unusual merit, and destined to have a big run in this country, will be presented at the Opera House this evening, by Hamilton's Dramatic Company, an aggregation of well known and talented artists. Those who go to the Opera House this evening are sure to be well entertained. The troupe has played in the neighboring cities and comes backed by the most complimentary press notices.

On last Friday night Garrett B. Wall, son of Judge Wall, in company with several of his young friends started on the steamer Telegraph to attend the exposition. On arriving at the city Master Garrett left his gold watch and chain in his coat pocket in his state room whilst he went to the washroom; upon his return his watch was gone. His distress and that of his young companion, Master Thomas Wheatley, Jr., can be well imagined and soon excited the sympathy of the officers and passengers. Certain colored cabin boys were suspicioned and Officer Knox was employed to shadow them, and the steward discharged them without assigning any reason. As soon as they reached the wharfboat the officer arrested them, and in company with young Wall and Wheatley, went to the Hammond street station, and upon searching the prisoners the watch was found upon Wm. Owens, but had been dropped into his pocket by Charles Hopkins. All three were locked up and the trial set for Monday before Judge Higley. Judge Wall, being in the city and hearing of the matter, determined to prosecute the thieves, and upon testimony of Garrett and Tom, Judge Higley sentenced Charles Hopkins and Oscar Kates to the work-house for 30 days and fined them $100 each.

A New post-office in Fleming county is called Sapp.

The Meanest Lover Yet.

Frederick O. Lyman is a festive youth with a rudimentary mustache that hovers lightly above his guileless smile, like the misty aureole over the head of a saint in a stained-glass window. Long years ago—fourteen may be—when he was a little boy, he had a playmate for whom he entertained tender feelings. Of course she was a little girl; otherwise there would have been no tender feelings. Childish affection ripened into youthful love, and for some time past the pair have been in that complicated state of mind peculiar to engaged persons. But Frederick was not content with prospective bliss and one girl. Last September he made the acquaintance of Miss Dow and ingratiated himself into her confidence to such an extent that the keys of her room were usually to be found in his pocket, and he was not seldom in the room. Still he did not neglect his best girl over in Charles-town, but continued to visit her with customary regularity and contemplate the matrimonial prospects with unabated enthusiasm. He thought it would be the proper thing to present the object of his legitimate affection with a bridal trousseau, and one day he gave her quite an extensive outfit, which pleased her greatly. It was very kind and thoughtful of Freddie, to make such a useful present to his adored one, but his manner of obtaining the trousseau is open to criticism, perhaps. He displayed much forethought and discrimination by selecting in Miss Dow a friend just about the size of the other girl, but it was not treating Miss Dow exactly right to take advantage of her trusting disposition and carry off her clothes as a present to t'other charmer. That was why the festive Freddie stood in the dock yesterday and pleaded guilty to a charge of larceny, and looked very mean, while the boot upon the judicial desk quivered visibly, as though its very sole were aching to come down and get one good square chance at him. Miss Dow, a thin-faced lady of uncertain age, with a Derby hat and blue spectacles, briefly related the story of her wrongs. She had given the defendant free access to her apartments, and he had abused her confidence by stealing her clothes for another woman. Then the other girl, with auburn hair and plain spectacles, took the stand and told how Freddie made her a present of the things, and said a lady friend had given them to him.

"Were the articles new and nice?" asked the Court.

"No, sir. Some of them were new, but they were not nice," and having given this characteristic feminine stab at her rival, Freddie's best girl elevated her chin in triumph and sailed across the room to a seat. Counsel for the defendant tried to smooth matters a little by stating that as a matter of fact the clothes were given to Lyman by Miss Dow, but fearing that such a story would not be believed and that he would be convicted anyway, Lyman had entered a plea of guilty to save trouble.

"I believe he had abundant grounds for pleading guilty," remarked his Honor with a grim smile. "It's a very peculiar case when a young man paying attention to two women gets into the confidence of the second to steal her clothes and make a present to the first. In addition to the turpitude of larceny, it involves an extraordinary spirit of meanness. Six months in the House of Correction."—Boston Globe.

—A Chattanooga letter says: Already there is invested here over $3,000,000 in manufacturing enterprises, over $2,000,000 of which is in iron interests. One company alone, the Roane Iron Company, has a paid-up capital of $1,000,000, and I understand money is every day seeking investment here. To give an idea how much values have increased here, in 1871 there was $3,600,000 worth of property, and in 1881 it swelled to $6,500,000, or about one hundred per cent. In 1882 the assessed value will be over $7,000,000. In the manufacturing there are employed over 3,000 hands, the Roane Iron Company paying one-fourth of these, or 800 in all.
